ORDERLY BOOK AND JOURNAL	i

NOTE BY DR. SPALDING.

The manuscript "Orderly Book and Journal" of Major John Hawks came into the possession of Rev. Dr. George B. Spalding in 1865, while he was pastor of the North, now Park Congregational Church, Hartford, Conn. It is now the property of the Vermont Historical Society. The material which it contains relates to military operations which took place in the Province of New York in the successful campaign of General Jeffrey Amherst against Ticonderoga and Crown Point, in 1759. The Society of Colonial Wars of the State of New York has put this very valuable manuscript into this type-written form with the expectation that it will sometime be published.

The original book is now (1901), one hundred and forty-two years old. The paper is of standard English manufacture, of stoutest linen, stamped with the Coat of Arms of England. The writing is a fine specimen of the ancient clear penmanship. The writer, John Hawks, was born in Deerfield, Mass., December 5, 1707. He was among the bravest defenders of Fort Massachusetts in 1746. In 1754 he was commissioned as Lieutenant by Governor Shirley, and had charge of the Colrain Forts. He commanded a company in the Army of General Abercrombie at Fort Ticonderoga in 1758, and as Major with General Amherst the following year. He served as Lieutenant-Colonel in the successful Canadian campaign which closed the war. He died at Deerfield, Mass., June, 1784.

The "Orders" in his book from June 18, 1759 to July 13, 1759, were issued at Half Way Brook, about seven miles from Fort Edward on the military road to Lake George. The troops at Half Way Brook formed a separate camp. They made up the First Battalion under the command of Brigadier-General Timothy Rugles of Massachusetts.

The daily order appears at the head of each paragraph, and in case of the issue of a second order on any day it was headed as an AFTER ORDER.

The manuscript of this "Orderly Book and Journal" was in 1842 (nearly sixty years ago) in the hands of General Epaphras Hoyt, who held many civil and military offices in Massachusetts, and was an historian of distinction. General Hoyt made many explanatory notes on the text of the Orderly Book, which appear in full in this copy, greatly increasing its value.

INTRODUCTION.

In many respects this diary of Major John Hawks, which the Society of Colonial Wars in the State of New York has undertaken to print, is remarkable in displaying the discipline that prevailed in the provincial armies during the middle of the eighteenth century, and the general conduct of those armies. Although on sight, there would appear to be considerable matter that is extraneous, on deliberation it has been deemed advisable to print the diary as it is—making, of course, correction of errors that necessarily attend the transcription of original records.

These records are valuable to the historian and interesting to the layman. The original spelling has not been molested, except in instances where flagrant eccentricity might bewilder the mind not acquainted with it.

The military orders are conspicuous for the latitude allowed to subordinates. The militia chafed under the rigidity of the rules of war and the severe restrictions of camp life. Discipline offered no inducement to their independent souls. Ordinary infringements under the code encountered a punishment involving five hundred and even a thousand lashes of the cat-o'-nine tails; the penalty of death was synonymous with desertion.

Particular stress was laid upon marksmanship. The gun of that day, seldom trustworthy in aim or velocity, was the long-barreled weapon, the ammunition was not the fixed ammunition of today; the paper cartridge and ball were carried in cartouche boxes, the powder generally in a horn which was often carved in an ornate manner in token of the campaigns the owner participated in. The commanding officers were not always confident of the aim of the rank and file, for one officer is on record as declaring there were men who "never fired a gun off," at a time when modern civilization believed the average man was thoroughly proficient in handling firearms. Scalping of women and children was interdicted, with a warning of reprisal should the enemy transgress this merciful obligation.

The range of country covered during Jeffrey Amherst's memorable campaign is the most picturesque, topographically and historically, in the State of New York. History fairly bubbles at almost every foot from Albany to Crown Point. All the English-speaking armies that operated in upper New York during Colonial and Revolutionary days—with the exception of the boastful Burgoyne's—were assembled, organized and began their campaigns at Albany. This venerable town was the general supply store of all the armies that operated to the north of it, from campaign to campaign. It has entertained and at times been the headquarters of the most distinguished English, Continental and American general officers who served in the American wars: General William Shirley; Sir William Johnson who owned a house there; General Abercrombie; Jeffrey Amherst; Philip Schuyler whose entertainments were the most lavish of the period; Thomas Gage who commanded the British forces at Boston at the outbreak of the Revolutionary War; Colonel William Eyre, the friend of Washington and of Braddock; Colonel William Haviland, subsequently the distinguished British General; John Stark; John Bradstreet; Israel Putnam; Charles Lee; David Wooster; the brothers Clinton—George afterward first Governor of New York, and James, later on in command of the northern department but better known as the father of DeWitt Clinton, the much-beloved Lord Howe who was killed at Ticonderoga and whose remains were escorted to Albany by Peter Schuyler and found a final resting place under the tower of the present St. Peter's Church at State and Chapel Streets. Many of the officers above mentioned, subsequently achieved distinction in the American Revolution.

French presumptuousness generated the disastrous tribulations that eventually culminated in the surrender of a French empire in America to England. Not satisfied with encroaching upon English territory at Crown Point, where they erected Fort Fredrich—the first of her insolent aggressions—the French authorities continued this offensive policy in other places and on other lines, until English patience gave way to English wrath and for thirty years the war raged with the destruction of the French régime in America.

Jeffrey Amherst never has been accorded full credit for masterful handling of military operations in America. Without exception he was the ablest general England ever sent to this country. Up to the time of Amherst's victory at Louisburg, the English arms had met reverse after reverse. It is true Sir William Johnson had defeated the gallant Dieskau at Lake George, but the fruit of that victory rotted on the ground because of Sir William's inactivity, of his overcaution and his lack of the instinct of a fighting soldier. John Forbes had been successful at Fort Duquesne, but Duquesne was a bloodless victory because of the abandonment of the post by the enemy. But Amherst's victory at Louisburg was the biggest nail driven into the French coffin in America.

The advantages gained by the French can be traced to two causes: incompetency of English generals and the contempt of the English for their adversaries. Braddock had been annihilated in Pennsylvania, Shirley balked at Niagara, Abercrombie discomfited at Ticonderoga and Colonel Monro massacred at Fort William Henry. Surely not a creditable record for a nation as powerful as the British, after three years of fighting?

The campaign of 1758 was laid on lines similar to that of 1755—three objectives. In 1755 the general plan contemplated the capture of Fort Duquesne by Braddock; of Fort Niagara by Shirley and of Ticonderoga and Crown Point by Sir William Johnson. The English scored one success and two failures. In 1758, England's greatest War Minister, William Pitt, with the determination of crushing the power of France in one campaign, organized the largest army America ever had seen, fifty thousand troops, of whom twenty thousand were provincials.

The three objectives were Louisburg, which was assigned to Amherst; Fort Duquesne to General Forbes, Ticonderoga and Crown Point to General Abercrombie. In this campaign the British gained two victories and suffered one defeat. Louisburg succumbed to Amherst's brilliant generalship and Forbes encountered no especial obstacle in accomplishing the task, generally regarded as difficult, given to him. History has been unsparing in its denunciation of Abercrombie for permitting Montcalm's four thousand, not only to check the advance of the English fifteen thousand but literally to put them to flight in "the extremist fright and consternation" from Lake Champlain to Lake George.

Amherst at Louisburg heard of the disaster to Abercrombie. Exercising the power vested in him as Commander in chief of his Majesty's forces in America and without waiting for orders, he assembled four regiments of the line and a battalion of Royal Americans, and sailed immediately for Boston. He landed at the Long Wharf in September. Delaying just long enough to replenish supplies, he marched his force through the woods to Albany. Here the troops were given a brief rest before the advance to Lake George was ordered. Unfortunately the season was too far advanced for hostile operations in that northern climate. In November, Abercrombie, relieved of command, returned to England.

In March, 1759, Amherst at Albany, began to assemble his army, the seventh England had organized for the conquest of Canada. The New England troops, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, gathered at Springfield. The first entry in the Hawks' diary is "Worcester, May 9th 1759." The second "Springfield, May 15th 1759." The next "Albany, 25th May, 1759." Six days later the Rhode Island regiment, under orders, with six days' provisions started for Fort Edward. At the same time a detail of two hundred men were directed to load bateaux, which had been built at Albany, and proceed to Half Moon. On the thirty-first all the guards of the Royal Highlanders were relieved by Connecticut troops and the remainder of the command was ordered to be ready to move at a moment's notice.

June 7th the army was encamped at Fort Edward, the troops having marched over the old state road, which Sir William Johnson had put in excellent repair three years before, the supplies having been transported up the Hudson River in bateaux. Here the troops were regaled with spruce beer, and discipline was tightened. The lines for the encampment were established, firing at marks was practised and details were selected to work on the roads. Careful attention was given to firearms. Indiscriminate firing was prohibited, arms were ordered to be kept clean and in good order, damaged cartridges turned in to the proper officer and commissary supplies provided for seven days. Arrangements were also made with the contractors for interchanging food where quantities were disproportionate or not sufficient or on the choice of a regiment preferring different proportions.

June 18th the troops were advanced to Half Way Brook, four miles, midway between Fort Edward and Lake George. Discipline here becomes more alert and severe. Special orders are given the guards and the pickets; officers to be extra vigilant on their outposts, to permit only two men to lie down at a time and to make their rounds very regularly; no man on any account to stray beyond the line of sentries, severe punishment to accompany any infraction. At the same time the morals of the men were not overlooked. Card-playing in camp was forbidden, an hour a day for exercise prescribed, profanity barred, and whoever is found guilty of disobeying the injunction against making noise in camp after tattoo, "will be took as a dispicer of the Marfhal law"!

June 20, Amherst issued orders for the main force to march to Lake George, where he arrived the following day "and encamped on its woody banks" an "intolerably hot day" "bringing unendurable discomfort to men and animals." During the four weeks following Amherst was a very busy man. His total force aggregated 11,133 of whom 5,279 were Colonial troops.

July 21st he "took the field" and passed down the lake, selecting for his camp the spot where Abercrombie disembarked the year before. The pressure on Quebec had forced the French commander to weaken the supports at Ticonderoga. When Amherst appeared the garrison consisted of scarcely twenty-three hundred men. Bourlemaque, the French commander, perceived at a glance the hopelessness of resistance and speedily made plans for withdrawing the main body of his force. Leaving Hebecourt with four hundred troops to mask the movement and with instructions to blow up the works as soon as the English batteries were established, he struck out through the wilderness for Crown Point and Canada. For two days the faithful little band of Frenchmen who had been left as a forlorn hope taught the British who trespassed within the zone of their gun fire several varieties of the strenuous life.

Amherst resolutely pushed forward his approaches, and had established his batteries within six hundred yards of the fort on the night of the 26th, when Hebecourt decided the hour had arrived to carry out Bourlemaque's orders. He loaded and pointed every gun, charged several mines, and lighted a fuse that connected with the overstocked powder magazine. The roar that followed was heard for miles. Flying, flaming and blazing embers and wreckage hurled through the air, set tiny fires to buildings that had escaped the general havoc.

At daylight the French flag on the fort was hauled down and the English flag was run to the staff head. The flames were extinguished. The fort itself was not seriously injured.

The diary supplies interesting information regarding the conduct of the troops before and after the fall of Ticonderoga, of the expedition of Major Robert Rogers to Crown Point and of the grave preparations of the army "under orders for marching for the reduction of all Canady."

August 4th, Amherst, arrived at Crown Point to find Bourlemaque had blown up the works. Acting under instructions from Pitt, he outlined the mammoth fortress upon which the English expended ten millions of dollars, which never was completed, and which to-day is the most picturesque ruins in New York and one of the most beautiful in the country.

Camp at Halfway Brook,† Thursday June 21st, 1759.

Regimental orders for the first Battalion of Colo. Ruggles Regiment that the Capt. or Commanding officers of Companies take particular care that their men keep their arms in good order and see that their flints are fast in their locks as I have observed that a great many flints are loose. In all parties it is further ordered that all Great Hats are cut so that the brims be 2 inches and a half wide

* Three mile (or sometimes called four mile) post I think must have been situated between Glens Falls village & Sandy Hill.—E. Hoyt.

† The works at Halfway Brook must have been erected in the campaign of 1758; the ground is level and rather low, but the brook furnished good water. It was so called from being half way from Fort Edward to Lake George. I believe there was a fort on each side of the brook, on opposite sides of the road; their remains were to be seen in 1817. Soon after Gen. Amherst took part at Lake George in 1759, they were abandoned and demolished.—E. Hoyt.

About half a mile north of the brook, a considerable number of our provincial troops were cut off by the Indians, July 20, 1758, among whom were three captains, Lawrence, Dakins, and Jones, with one lieutenant, one ensign and fourteen privates. Captain Lawrence was from Groton and the grandfather of General Langley of Hawley on his mother's side. The affair took place near what is called Indian or Blind Rock, near the present road. A party of workmen on the road were first attacked and a detachment sent from the brook defeated on advancing to the spot. The men being panic stricken deserted their officers.

Soon after the close of the war, in 1763, a few settlements were commenced in this quarter, and Abraham Wing built a house and barn at Glens Falls which were standing in 1777, the time of Burgoyne's invasion, but were afterwards burnt by Major Carlton, in 1780, who made an incursion from Canada.—E. This makes no alteration in posting the officers or settling the Battalions in Grand Divisions, Subs Division, one platoon in the front & flank & rear and flank platoon. When the Battalions is told off in platoons on the parade the whole Battalion is to be 3 deep, the two centre platoons close and their intervals of half the front of the platoons left between its platoon from the one on the right of the centre to the platoon on the right of the Battalion, the same to be observed from the platoon on the left of the centre to the platoon of the Battalion. The commanding officer will then order the officers commanding platoons to form them two deep, which they will do by commanding the rear rank & those on the right of the column facing to the right and those on the left facing to the left & halting in the interval the first half forms on the right of the front of each platoon on the right of the colume and on the left of the front rank of each platoon on the left of the colume the second half forms in like manner on the right & left of the second rank. If there is an odd man the officer takef what one he pleasefth as a second; The method is always to be practised, that every officer commanding a platoon may have the men of the third rank next to him that in case the service requires it the whole battalion may be formed three deep in one instant by the officers of platoons forming the rear rank, as they were, which is never to be done unless the officer commanding the Battalion orders it; the men to be acquainted that this is ordered, as the enemy has very few regular troops to oppose us that no yelling of Indians or fire of Canadeans can possibly be att two ranks. If the men are silent and attentive & obedient to their officers who will lead them to their enemy & their silence will terrifie them more than any huzzaing or noice they can make which the Generall stricktly forbids; And their attention and obedience to their officers who commands platoons will ensure success to his Majesties arms.

The General Court Martiel of which Colo. Ruggles is president is dissolved. The General hath been pleased to approve of the following sentences of the above Court Martiel: George Deforty of the Inskillon Regt. accused of suspicion of breaking up a trunk is found not guilty of the crime laid to his charge; he is therefore acquitted. Wm. Harper, of Brigadeer Gage's Regt of Light Infantry, accused of theft is found guilty of the crime laid to his charge & is to receive 400 laifhes with a cat of nine tails. John Cotter, foldier in Brigadeer Gage's Regt of Light Infentry accused of deffertion is found guilty of the crime laid to his charge and is to receive one thousand laifhes with a cat of nine tails.

To Lt. Col. Ingerole.

Albany, May 15th, 1760.

All the Massachusetts troops, except one officer and thirty men are to assemble tomorrow morning at 5 o'clock and to receive bateaux from Col. Bradstreet. You will send one of your Majors to command them and they are to take two days provision with them, if they have none remaining—they are to continue at work till further orders—the Major will apply to Col. Bradstreet for provision. By order of the General.

Wm. Amherst, Dy. Adj. Genl.

To Lt. Col. Ingerole.

Albany, May ye 16th, 1760.

Sr. I have received your returns of the 153 men of the Massachusetts forces, this day arrived at Greanbush and as no time is to be lost in the conveying the provisions up to the different posts and that we ought not to miss the present favourable opportunity of the rivers being higher than they have lately been: I here inclose you an order to the commanding officer of those men, to cross the river with them tomorrow morning by break of day to be employed in the above service. You will therefore, immediately upon the receipt hereof forward said order, that the same may be complied with without delay—when and as often as any more of the Massachusetts troops arrive you will please to report them to me immediately. I am fir your Honorable servant, Signed Jeff. Amherst.

P. S.—I would have you pick me out ten seamen as the troops arrive and let me know when you have as many with you.

To Major Caleb Willard.

Albany, May 18th, 1760.

Sr. As no time is to be lost in forwarding everything up to the different posts, I accordingly inclose you an order for the distribution of two Lieutenants and sixty men of the Hundred and sixty four of the Massachusetts forces arrived this day, to proceed to Crown Point agreeable to the directions herein mentioned, by which you will see that ten of them are to be seamen, I before ordered, of whom you will send me the names. The remaining One hundred and four with the other officers, you will order to attend Col. Bradstreet, the Deputy Quarter Master Genl, early tomorrow morning to receive his directions, and obey and follow such orders as they shall receive from him pursuant to the orders likewise enclosed. I am, Sr, Your Humble Servant, Signed Jeff Amherst.

To Major Willard.

Albany May ye 22nd, 1760.

Sr. On receipt of this you'll order the men that returned from carrying up provisions, to cross the river and march to the hill above the town where they are to encamp, as there's some alteration made with regard to their encampment. You'll order the Quarter Master to call on me at Headquarters that I may show him the ground. You'll send a return of the men that are to encamp and a proportionable number of tents will be ordered. I am your most humble servant

Robert Prescott, Aid-de-camp.

To Col. Saltonstall.

Albany May ye 22nd, 1760.

Sr. You will see the within immediately complied with—you must appoint somebody to act as Quarter Master for the present. If any troops arrived last night let the Adjt. report them this morn.
Sr, Your most humble servant Richd. Saltonstall.

By His Excellency Jeffrey Amherst, Esq. Major General Commander-in-Chief of all His Majesties Forces in North America &c &c.

To Major Hawks or Field Officer commanding the 250 of the Massachusetts forces ordered to proceed to McBeans camp on the other side Saratoga: You will agreeable to ye orders of this day early tomorrow morning set out for & proceed with your duty to Mc Beans camp on ye other side Saratoga, observing to take with you, your two days provisions which are to the 29th inclusively, your tents, eighty-nine axes, and one hundred spades, for the carriage of which you shall be allowed a sufficient number of batteaux. On your arrival at Mc Beans camp you will follow such advice as you shall receive from Lt. Ratzer & Rose who have my orders to lay out a road from thence across the hill to Fort Edward which it will be the business of your party to widen, straighten & clear. Agreeable to the order I have given for that purpose to the said Lieutenants Ratzer & Rose or either of them which directions you'll follow & cause your men strictly to obey. Also you are directed to take your tents with you, yet I think they will be an incumbrance whilst you are cutting & clearing the road whereof I would have you leave them in your battoes which you will cause to follow as you advance and you'll receive provisions as it becomes due to your party by applying to the commanding officer of the post which shall be nearest to you. You will apply to Captain Williamson, Engineer, who will deliver the above tools to you and Mr. Schuyler, one of Coll Bradstreets Deputys, who will deliver you the battoes as before mentioned. When the work is finished you will deliver the axes and spades to Major Reed or Commanding officer at Fort Edward taking his receipt for the same.

When the whole of the service is perfectly complete you will report to me thereupon & encamp & continue at Fort Edward with your party till you receive further orders from me.

Given under my hand at Head Quarters at Albany this 27th day of May 1760, Jeffry Amherst, By His Excellency's Command.

Orders:

To Major Hawks or Officer commanding 250 men of ye Massachusetts forces on the road to Fort Edward as I imagine the road which you was ordered to make by my instructions to you of ye 27th of May must be nearly or quite finished by the time this can reach you, this is, therefore, to direct that so soon as the said road is completed, you will proceed with the detachment under your command to Fort George, applying to the commanding officer at Fort Edward for carriages to transport your tents to Lake George, where you will demand battoes for passing the Lake and on your landing on the other side will march to Ticonderoga, taking your tents &c. across. You will there complete your detachment with arms and cartridge boxes for which this shall be a sufficient order & you'll give proper receipt for the same. You are then to proceed to Crown Point in battoes & march your detachment by land in case battoes can not be furnished you—& put yourself under the command of Col. Haviland at Crown Point.

J. Amherst.

NOTICES OF FAME OF THE BATTLE GROUNDS.

To a traveler unacquainted with the history of the country from Fort Edward to Lake George, the route will present nothing very interesting. Professor Silliman, who passed over it in 1819, says, "It is an uninteresting country, partly of pines, barren and partly of stony hills"; and excepting the villages of Sandy Hill and Glens Falls, it will so appear. But to me every mile brings up reminiscences of military events of a most interesting nature in which officers and soldiers of my acquaintance have a share.

On the low ground a small distance west of Sandy Hill village the baggage teams and escort were cut off in July, 1758, in an Indian ambuscade. At the east part of Glens Falls village was a small field work at the time, and at Halfway Brook the remains of two field forts are seen, one on each side. Here considerable bodies of troops were posted in 1758 and 1759, and many of the orders in the preceding pages are dated. About half or three-quarters of a mile north of the brook, where the road rises to a pine woods, at what was called Indian Rock, a party of Provincial troops were attacked, defeated, and a considerable number killed, on July 20, 1758, among whom were Captains Dakin, Jones, and Lawrence, two lieutenants, and one ensign. Captain Lawrence was from Groton, Mass.

About two miles from there the road passes a defile formed by morasses on each side and a brook called Five Mile Run. Near this defile Montcalm passed with the advance party during the siege of Fort William Henry, August, 1757. About a mile north of this defile is the south point of French Mountain and a small village near the place where Baron Dieskau encamped the night before his attack on General Johnson, September 8, 1755, and also the place where Captain McGinniss and Folsom (?) attacked Dieskau's troops after their repulse at the lake. At the distance of half or three-quarters of a mile from this place on the road is the ground where Colonel Ephraim Williams with 1,000 Provincials and 200 Indians was ambuscaded by Dieskau on the morning of the same 8th of September, and defeated with the loss of many officers and men of his detachment and he himself slain. The ground is somewhat elevated, with a ravine and a swamp on the east side. Passing this spot the road descends to lower ground to a small brook and within a quarter of a mile passes the west side of Bloody Pond. The ground south of this place where Colonel Williams fell is generally open, but at the time of the action was covered with woods. The principal part of the action was fought some distance south of the pond. A small distance north of the pond the road has recently been turned to the right into low ground and intersects the old road about a mile south of the lake. By following the old road from the pond the traveler will pass over other places where attacks occurred. At the south end of the lake and the ruins of Fort William Henry and Fort George the ground is now mostly open, and on that south of the latter is the place of the battle between Johnson's and Dieskau's forces, September 8, 1755. The village of Caldwell occupies the ground where Montcalm carried on his operations in August, 1757, at the siege of Fort William Henry and the intrenched camp of Colonel Monro, the latter on the rocky eminence south-east of William Henry, where Fort George is now seen. Several skirmishes occurred south of this intrenched camp during the siege, as well as at other times and places on the old road, and on the same ground the massacre of Monroe's garrison happened.

The ground where Williams was first attacked is still covered with wood, but a small cottage is seen on the open ground south of Bloody Pond. On this battle ground about 140 men were found and buried the second day after the affair, and among them Colonel Williams, at a large rock within a few rods of the present road. The ground now presents a solitary aspect.

In the journals of officers and soldiers written during the campaigns of 1755, the arm of Lake Champlain extending from Ticonderoga to Whitehall is often called South Bay; but the name was more properly applied to the bay spreading to greater width southwest of that at Whitehall, and here the Rangers and detachments from the armies at Lake George were often sent to watch the enemy in their incursions by that channel. In the war of the Revolution, subsequent to Burgoyne's expedition, a post was maintained at Fort Ann village.—E. Hoyt.

(1760) Camp at Lake George, July 5th, 1760.

Regimental Orders:

That the party be ready to embark, in order to cross the Lake, by the break of day tomorrow morning. That Major Hawks lead the front; Capt McFarland bring up the rear. That one officer go in each battoe and the remainder to be under the conduct of some trusty man. That five well men be appointed to each battoe. The sick or invalids be distributed at discretion. That officers take special care to equalize the strength of boat crews to the best advantage.

Sr John Hawks Major.

Sunday the 20th of July 1760. Parole, Prince Town.

For the day tomorrow Major Campbell.

Spruce beer not exceeding one barrel per company at the usual price to be delivered by Mr. Francis tomorrow morning at 5 o'clock to the Regular troops who are to receive the same under the directions of their respective Quarter Masters, who are likewise to give receipts from time to time for the quantity received and to be answerable that the barrels are returned the following morning; if neglected that Regiment or Company will be struck off the allowance for one week, the Quarter Master to take care that the barrels are never rolled either full or empty. Any man detected disobeying these orders will be severely punished.

On Tuesday morning the same hour the Provincial troops, Rangers etc. may receive spruce beer at the brewery, entirely on the same footing and observing the orders under the same penalty as above directed for the regular troops. The delivery of spruce beer to be continued daily to the Regulars, Provincials and Rangers, if barrels enough can be provided. Beginning as above directed a return to be sent in by the respective Quarter Masters this day to Mr. Francis, Barrack Master, who has the direction of the brewery of the number of the barrels per Company which will make the brewing and issuing more regular. In the same return may be mentioned what quantity Regimental sutlers will want for officers. The quantity of molasses of what was expected and what did arrive and on the road prevents any double price being made for the prefent. The money for the beer to be collected from the respective Regiments in consequence of the receipts before mentioned as often as Mr. Francis applies for the same. Aug. 12, 1760.

Regimental Orders:

It is expected that the centries be alert upon their duty and suffer none to pass after 9 o'clock without hailing. The vaults are to be covered every morning & no man is to ease himself in any other place. Tomorrow a new vault is to be dug against the encampment near the garden. It is expected that there be no disturbance in camp after night & that all who are able are to turn out at revellie. It is particularly expected that every man washes himself constantly and keep himself clean. The barks are all to be taken up from the vacant tents and carried to the guard forthwith. The streets must be cleared at the front of the encampment. John Hawks.

Crown Point, 13th August 1760. Parole, Boston.

The working party tomorrow as usual: it is recommended to Col. Hawks & the officers under his command that the arms of their men may be inspected and kept in good order and particularly the arms of the artificers so that they may be in good order when wanted.
